

nation. They found the area almost as isolated as in the first millennium B.C., when herbs, spices, and incense were coveted throughout much of the ancient world. Today those magic aromas—particularly frankincense—still permeate everyday life.

Trail

By THOMAS J. ABERCROMBIE

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SENIOR WRITER

Photographs by LYNN ABERCROMBIE